Recent Developments

Commodity exploration companies experienced a difficult first half in 2022, with the S&P/TSX venture metals and mining index down 32%. Meanwhile, gold and copper declined by 1% and 17%, respectively.

Global inflation rates have increased dramatically in 2022, mainly because of the war in Ukraine and CV19-related monetary stimulus policies. In the US, rising inflation rates triggered an aggressive response by the federal reserve that saw the fed funds rate increase by 1.5%. The fed’s response to control inflation caused a risk-off trade which impacted risky assets. Early-stage – high beta - companies, including commodity explorers, experienced some of the sharpest declines in their stock prices.

In the first half of 2022, the gold price outperformed major equity market indices, including the S&P500 and the NASDAQ, which declined by more than 20% and 30%, respectively. Gold is generally seen as a haven in the times of economic and geopolitical uncertainty we are experiencing today.

Industrial commodities, including battery metals, also held up better than some major equity indices in the first half of 2022. However, prices declined from recent peaks - despite the continued strength in demand for electric cars - due to increased fears of a significant economic slowdown and the possibility of a recession caused by the interest rate hikes. Uranium prices followed the same trend seen by industrial metals. However, issues supplying enriched uranium from Russia kept prices supported.

The fund manager believes we are in a secular bull market for industrial commodities. Electrification and the global push to combat climate change are expected to provide demand support, especially as quality deposits become harder to find. In the near term, supply chain constraints and increased enthusiasm about green economy initiatives will continue to raise these metals’ prices. As for precious metals, geopolitical uncertainty coupled with rapidly rising inflation pressures should cause gold to outperform other asset classes over the medium term. The US and major central banks have started prioritizing inflation control and slowing down their economies. However, implementing monetary tightening programs will likely be measured and muted by the challenge of avoiding a possible recession. Thus, volatility in the gold price is expected in the near term. Lastly, advancements in nuclear power utilization should support uranium prices. However, short-term trading may create volatility as the spot price is discovered with low volumes.

The limited partnership's exploration investments provide exposure to various commodities. The most significant exposure is gold, which is no surprise as in 2021, precious metals (mainly gold) accounted for more than two-thirds of exploration expenditures in Canada.

The government of Canada estimates the 2022 exploration and deposit appraisal expenditures to reach $3.7 billion in 2022. In April, the government announced doubling the mineral exploration tax credit to 30% for targeted critical minerals in the 2022 federal budget. In addition to the tax credit increase, this first critical minerals strategy's initiatives total $3.8 billion over the next eight years and it includes nickel, copper, cobalt, rare earth elements, and uranium.

There is not necessarily a relationship between turnover rate and the performance of a portfolio.

<sup>(3)</sup> The trading expense ratio represents total commissions and other portfolio transaction costs expressed as a percentage of average net assets during the period.
